Electric Rationing — Symbol of the Times

Hand of Government Never Created Plenty

Consumption of electricity has been arbitrarily cut in the southeastern states. An advertisement of the Tennessee Valley Authority appearing in the West Point (Miss.) Times Leader, and presumably other papers throughout the Southeast, says:

Says Nazi Subs Operating Off Newfoundland

Canadian Minister Asserts Submarines Working Within Sight of Shore

HORONTO, Canada — (AP) — Navy Minister Angus MacDonald said Wednesday that Nazi submarines were operating off the coast of Newfoundland—within sight of the shore.

The Navy minister's statement was made when reporters asked him to give further details of his report to the House of Commons Tuesday night.

"You can say there are Nazi submarines right of the coast of Newfoundland—that they are actually within sight of the shore."

"Naturally we are attacking them wherever we can find them and so are the patrol planes of the airforce constitutional command," the minister said.

He said the submarines were usually found by sound and attacked by depth charges.

"Our planes" sight them and attack them by bombs and we are working closely together," he said.

Admiral Elles was present and gave his approval of the statement, asserting the "Germans certainly know where they are."

Marine observers in New York said the report of U-boats operations within sight of Newfoundland was forecast several months ago when Nazi submarines attacked and sank three ships out of a convoy less than 280 miles from St. John's, Newfoundland.

One source said the Nazis were reaching closer and closer to the "American continent as diplomatic relations worsened."

SPG Uses Old Dolph Station Material Arriving Averages 56 Carloads Day

Typical of the change wrought by national defense activity is the hurry and bustle now going on about the old Dolph Station, located inside
the reservation of the Southwestern Proving Ground. This freight receiving point was known as a "closed station" on the railroad books for years prior to the location of the Proving Ground here.

Now freight received at this station is estimated by Proving Ground officials to run into the thousands of dollars, and while the peak in shipments has not been reached at the project as yet, officials believe that the value of cargo received here will soon be running close to a quarter million dollars per month.

Located near the Dolph Station is the huge Southwestern Proving Ground Central Warehouse, where materials and supplies of all kinds are stored. In this area are many small storage units where different types of materials are housed.

Tuesday, said by receiving clerks at the job to be about average day for the arrival of supplies, fifty-six carloads rolled into this station. The bulk of this material being flooring and other types of building material.

Another item of interest to railroad fans is the number of foreign line cars routed into this station since the Proving Ground was established.
Daily cars come in that make the traffic men themselves ponder the origin of the rolling stock. A small railyard in that east whose outfit consisted of an engine and two box cars had one of these cars here last week.

At any rate in freight yards throughout the United States, yard clerks are daily routing carloads of building supplies to this station.

Because the army is forging another link in the national defense chain at this point the name Dolph Station is again a living symbol of progress and transportation.

Materials for Flood Area Lost in Train Wreck

None Seriously Hurt When Freight Collides With Another

LITTLE ROCK — (AP) — A 21-car freight train rushing gravel, sandbags and timber northward from Little Rock to bulwark threatened levees
Wednesday crashed into the rear-end of a string of parked boxcars on the main line of the Missouri Pacific railway 6 miles west of Conway, splinning debris over the right-of-way and temporarily tying up the line.

Crewmen on the northbound freight jumped and only minor injuries resulted. The crew and locomotive of the parked cars did not figure in the accident.

The northbound locomotive was virtually demolished and wreckage was thrown across the tracks. Six gravi-el cars overturned and others were damaged, temporarily depriving Ft.
Smith, almost surrounded by flood waters, of its last railway outlet and further complicated communications in the Arkansas valley where other lines have suspended service.

Concern for the safety of levee protected lands lessened as army engineers announced they were apparently winning their fight to hold levees
all along the Arkansas.

But they won't like it.
And in the long run they mean to do something about it.

The words of government officials only a few years ago that America was a land of "wealth" and "power" and
"plenty" prove to be empty oratory
when real necessity arises.

The record of the passing years will show, without malice or partisanship, that men in government make just as many, if not more, mistakes than men in private business—and that government relishes those periods of crisis which private business shrinks from.

But beyond all this is the graver problem of a once-rich American sinking into that pauper civilization where all work for the government and none seeks to create wealth.

The break closed Highway 154 and
detours were posted.

The Arkansas, slowly inching its
near record crest toward the Mississippi river, already covered thousands
of acres through failure of a half-dozen levees.

Engineers here said it was possible all levees would hold.

LaGuardia Is Winner in N. Y.

But Mayor Loses Two of City's Five Boroughs

NEW YORK — (AP) — Fiorello H. La-Guardia was elected mayor of New York a third time Tuesday. But for the first time he failed to carry all five boroughs. He lost Queens to O'Dwyer by 92,853 votes and Richmond (Staten Island) by more than 10,000.

The mayor, who ran as the candidate of the Republican, American Labor, City Fusion and United City parties, defeated O'Dwyer in the prosecutor's home borough of Brooklyn; carried the Bronx, home territory of Democratic National Chairman

Arthur Barr, 20, Hope youth who suffered a severe concussion in a plane crash last Monday afternoon, was reported to be considerably improved Wednesday, members of the family said here.

The accident occurred about 5:30
Monday afternoon and young Barr did not regain consciousness until early Tuesday night.

But there were other things that came closer to Bernstorff. His popularity in America slipped to the vanishing point and beyond, for he became a most hated man in this country.
Nor, when he got back to Berlin, was he any more popular there.

Special Jap Envoy to U.S. for Conference

Former Ambassador to Germany, Kurusu, Takes Clipper for U. S.

TOKYO — (AP) — The Japanese government announced Wednesday night that it was sending Saburo Kurusu, former ambassador to Germany, to Washington by Trans-Pacific Clipper in an effort to reach an accord with the United States in view of the "very serious situation prevailing."

Arrangements for Kurusu's Trans-Pacific flight were made in radio-phone talks Tuesday night between U. S. Ambassador Joseph C. Grew and Secretary Hull, resulting in a two-day delay of the Clipper's departure from Hongkong. Let him catch it.

The special envoy is already enroute having left Tokyo by plane Tuesday.

The government spokesman said his mission was to facilitate U. S.-Japanese understanding through talks which have been in progress since last August.

Domestic official Japanese news agency, said Kurusu would second the efforts of Ambassador Admiral Nomura to "explain the Japanese situation to U. S. leaders including President Roosevelt."

Nevertheless the departure of the envoy whose title is special advisor to Ambassador Nomura coincided with a publication in the Japanese Times and Advertiser of a 7-point program which said the U. S. must accept if the accord is to be reached.

In effect this called on America to withdraw her influence from the Orient, recognize Japanese military, economic and diplomatic conquest of the past 10 years and to approve Japan's "new order."

Meanwhile another levee on the upper Arkansas failed early Wednesday.
Conway county's smallest barrier at the foot of the Petit Jean mountain collapsed under the river's pressure, letting water through to cover 1,300 acres of farmlands, causing heavy crop damage. The dyke gave way despite the efforts of 200 workers.

The break closed Highway 154 and
detours were posted.

The Arkansas, slowly inching its
near record crest toward the Mississippi river, already covered thousands
of acres through failure of a half-dozen

ble all levees would hold.

Dr. James G. Martindale, was recently named chairman of the Health for Defense committee composed of representatives of local organizations, professional persons, citizens of the community, local doctors, and the Public Health department. These groups are united in one effort to better the general public health of the community.

During the examination of draftees, it was learned that the weakest link in National Defense was the health of the citizens of the country. As a nation is only as strong as those who protect it, it is necessary for this condition to be corrected immediately.

It is the purpose of the committee on Health for Defense to effect a helpful change in the conditions in Under crafty war preparedness plans of the Soviets, highly modern industrial plants, like the giant steel works pictured above, rose up in the endless reaches of trans-Ural Russia and Siberia. The map, right, shows how they dot this once-barren area. Also the distances from the battle front to the "blitz-proof" Ural Mountains.

His imperial master was angry with him. For Bernstorff had repeatedly warned the German government that unrestricted submarine warfare upon American shipping would be certain, sooner or later, to bring the United States into the conflict. He added for good measure that once America came in, Germany's cause was lost. Prophets of that kind are never public heroes. Bernstorff became a diplomat without a job.

Charles Laughton and his wife, Elsa Lanchester, are appearing in one of the sequences of "Tales of Manhattan," and it's their first American picture together.

Speaking of some of the pictures they did together in England—"Henry VIII," "Rembrandt" and "The Beachcomber"—Laughton recalled that their first films were a series of H. G. Wells shorts. In those, Miss Lanchester was the star, and Laughton played only walk-on bits.

FOR THE LOVE OF PETE!

By BURTON BENJAMIN

THE STORY: It seems strange to blond, pretty Anne Humphreys all in the California sunsets at State's new football team's son and her people around her idol-worshipping Pete Laird, a green football player in the center of the sunsets. She has loved since the first when they were freshmen three years before. With George Lamont, the team's coach and star blocker, the two shared college fun and plans for the future—Anne and Pete to marry before he returned to medical school. State said that he is a virtual boy and as Anne returns to the hotel to wait for him for a brief meeting before her train leaves for the coast, she finds that there's a big alumni celebration scheduled. Then Pete receives a note from Hollywood star Stephanie Stevens, making him to meet her after the game.

CHAPTER II
PETE LAIRD stepped out of the locker room door into a maelstrom of people. It made the California game seem like a taffy-pulling contest at the Ladies' Aid Society.

"There he is!" shrieked dirty face. "Sign this," commanded pug-nose with pigtails and an auto-graph book.

"This way!" bellowed the per-spring one with a camera. Hemmed in, clawed, Laird tried to fight his way through the eager faces. "Gimme a hand!" he gasped to a cop who was trying to push the mob back.

They finally retreated far enough for Pete to fix his coat and straighten his tie. Laird clutched the cop's arm. "Get me outta this," he pleaded.

"Where to?" "Gate D," said Pete. Giggling and gawking, the mob began to stir again. Pete felt like a two-headed man at a freak show.

They pushed their way through the crowd and finally got out of the ramp. "Gate D's two entrances down," said the cop. "I'll try and keep these people back."

Pete walked swiftly toward the entrance. The wolves had given up the chase except for two photographers who followed on the run.

Stephanie's limousine was unmistakable. It was sleek and shiny, long as a horse. Blinds were drawn in back and a chauffeur sat in the open front seat.

"This Miss Stevens' car?" Pete asked nervously.

"Yes, sir," replied the chauffeur, snapping out of the seat. "Are you Mr. Laird?" Pete nodded. "Won't you step in, sir?" The chauffeur opened the door.

"Hey, Joe," speculated an approaching photographer, nudging his companion. "Ain't that Stephanie's battle wagon?"

"Yeah, man," whistled his colleague. "Say, the boss is gonna love this! Follow Laird for a few routine shots after the game," he tells me. I say, "Sure, boss, I'll get yuh something." But when he sees the great Laird with this model, he smacked his lips.

Miss Duffie and Mr. Holloman Are Wed Sunday at Bride's Home

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Patrick Duffie announce the marriage of their daughter, Jacqueline Patricia, to Chester Clarence Holloman. The Reverend Thomas Brewster, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony Sunday, November 2, at the home of the bride in the presence of relatives.

The home was decorated with petal pink and white chrysanthemums with white tapers in silver candelabras on either side of the mantel.

The bride was lovely in a bahama blue peplum suit with plumb accessories. Her shoulder corsage was a single orchid.

The couple left for a wedding trip to New Orleans and the Gulf Coast after which they will be at home at 416 North Madison Avenue, El Dorado, Arkansas.

Sports Around Washington

Capital City Packs Stadium to See Pro-Footballers

By JACK STINNETT
WASHINGTON—When Washington goes for sports, it goes all out. Proof is the phenomenal way official and un-official Washington packs Griffith Stadium and junks to Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn and Chicago, to see their football team the Redskins, battle the other professional teams of the National League.

Not even in New York or Chicago do the fans turn out any better than in Washington, where the Redskins play to an average of more than 30,000 persons per game. Six years ago, the same team (but of course with the same team but not of course with the same players) was a Boston team, winning 50 per cent or more of its games every season and drawing a weekly gate of between two and three thousands.

What other pro or even college team could boast of having such a fellow as Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones leave out the first ball to start its season? What other eleven could boast a telegram from Sen. Carter Glass that reads: "Sincerely hope Sammy Baugh ill stim his way to victory in every game of the season and lead his team to signal triumphs over his adversaries."

Or a letter from Emil Schram, he, on his elevation to head of the New York Stock Exchange, wrote: "Please rest assured that my allegiance to the Redskins will not, in any way, be diminished."

Where else could you find isolationist Sen. Gerald P. Nye, OPM Co-Director William S. Knudsen and Jesse Jones all sitting in the same box and bellowing in unison for the same cause—victory of the Redskins?

I have been through some of these amazings. I have seen crowds, limited only by the number of seats that could be jammed into the stadium, droop like wet chicks at a Redskin defeat or go wild with exultation when Baugh tossed one of his bullet passes to Ed Justice in the end zone to give the team a last-minute victory.

What I asked Redskins' Owner George P. Marshall, do you think accounts for this all-out enthusiasm of the nation's capital for pro football. (Marshall owned the team in Boston but every customer over 3,000 probably could have gotten in for two peanuts and an unbent pin.)

Some of his theories are an interesting dissertation on what makes Washington, D. C., different from the rest of the United States.

For example: Washington is made up of a heterogeneous population. The folks here come from everywhere. Their home state ties are strong. And 17 of these home states are represented by the 33 members of the Redskins squad (actually there are 22, because a number of the boys started on teams in colleges or universities in

ARMY AND NOTRE DAME BATTLE TO TIE IN THE MUD—John Hatch (31), Army back is tackled by Harry Wright (44), Notre Dame, as he runs back opening kick-off. Jack Warner (32) helps bring Hatch down as the two teams battled to a 0 to 0 tie in a sea of mud at New York City.

TCU WINS OVER BAYLOR BY SCORE OF 23 TO 12—Van Hall, Texas Christian back is tackled by Bud Gatewood (35) of Baylor after a 4 yard gain for a first down in opening quarter of game played at Waco, Texas. At the final whistle TCU held a 23 to 12 lead over Baylor.

WILDCAT'S FLASHY PLAYING NOT ENOUGH AGAINST GOPHERS—Bill De Correvont (49), flashy Northwestern back, picks up 9 yards during second quarter of Minnesota-Northwestern game played at Minneapolis, Minn. Final score: Gophers 8, Wildcats 7.

TEXAS TAKES SMU 34 TO 0—Jack Crain (44) of Texas makes a neat press interception and goes for a long gain in third quarter of game against Southern Methodists. By a score of 34 to 0 Texas overwhelmed SMU in the game played at Dallas.

other than their native states.) Jesse Jones, for example, didn't know a punt from a wing back—and didn't care—until he went out one Sunday to see those pride of Texas, Sammy Baugh and Dick Todd, do their stuff. Now he knows more rules than a referee and can discourse at length on the standing and stars of nearly every team in Texas, as well as those of the pro league. As with Jones, so with most of governmental Washington.

In the case of many of the lesser lights in government employ, there is one added factor. Most of them come from small towns and small colleges. Their teams were strictly in the bush leagues. Now, they have something to root for that not only is big time, but is close to tops on the Major circuit.

On the more prosaic side, of course, is the fact that Washington is NOT a big college football fan and those who love the sport have to satisfy themselves with the pros or not at all.

Still that alone wouldn't account for an annual advance sale of 15,000 season tickets; Redskins fan clubs of 100 or more members who hold pre-game luncheons and have "lecturers" who tell them all about the plays and players before every game; weekly audiences so full of women (most of them government employees); and many who never saw a football game in their lives until they started following the pigskin heroes of the national capital.

All of that may not explain it, but it doesn't matter what the reason, the fact remains that Washington is the bonanza of professional football and it was George P. Marshall who discovered and staked claim to the diggings.

The new movie, writes the critic, was refreshing. I felt like a new woman when I woke up.

Mrs. Wimpus—The new couple next door seem very devoted. He kisses her very time they meet. Why don't you do that?

Wimpus—I don't know her well enough yet.

Betty Field in Hollywood

Film City Turns Broadway Good Girl Into a Hussy

By JACK DEVLIN
NRA Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK—From Sweet Sixteen to a cheap bimbo all in one quick hush—bang—just like that. That's Hollywood. It's also blonde Betty Field as far as her roles are concerned. And she loves it!

Remember Betty as the sweet little thing doing her darndest, trying to get along in "Two on an Island," and then suddenly popping up as a naughty little hussy in the role of "Curley's Wife" in the picture, "Of Mice and Men."

Betty, Boston-born and New York bred, doesn't know how it happened. "I was doing kid parts on Broadway and having a tough time trying to get along because I was so young and there weren't enough of those roles," she said.

"Then, out in Hollywood they were having an awful time trying to find somebody to meet their requirements for 'Curley's Wife.' I guess they tried everybody else and then they tried me. They decided I would do."

Really "Sweet" Type of Girl

Betty wound up her escapades in that picture by being strangled. She had done such a good job, it developed, that Warner Brothers signed her up for a couple more parts where she plays the type of girl who is the object of much behind-the-hand whispering.

In the first new picture "Blues in the Night," she is shot to death. In the second production, "King's Row," Betty is poisoned by her father to ruin her career before it goes any further.

She certainly doesn't look like the type of girl who would normally be considered for such type of role. She is pretty, of course, has a rather sweet face, and is the sort who would politely wow the boys at a fraternity dance.

Betty, who is 22 years old, unmarried and not even engaged, is a hail-fellow-well-met kind of girl but doesn't drink and doesn't smoke. She likes sports but admits she is poor at them.

Playing naughty parts is fun, she said, so she likes them. They are easier, too, in her opinion.

"How many people know bad girls like that?" she asked. "That means you could do only a fair job of acting and people wouldn't know whether it was good or not because they don't know people like that. I'm sure of it."

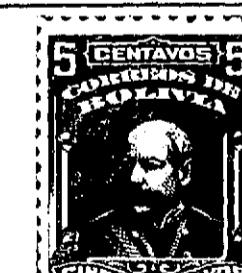

She also likes comedy, though, and hopes to get a chance at it soon, both for variety and the pleasure it would give her. As much as she likes playing the part of a hussy, she said, she knows how Hollywood types its players and wants to avoid "getting stuck, you might say."

Jewell, Lester in College 'Who's Who'

CONWAY—Among the students whose names will appear in the 1941-42 edition of "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities" are Robert Jewell and Edward Lester of Hope, students at Hendrix College. A faculty committee at Hendrix selected the nine outstanding Hendrix students on the basis of character, leadership in extra curricular activities, scholarship and potentialities of future usefulness to the business world.

Jewell, a senior at Hendrix this year, was one of the Hendrix students honored last year. He is president of the Hendrix Christian Association and of the Hendrix "H" Club, lettermen in athletics. A football letterman for three years, he was to have been captain of the 1941 squad before intercollegiate football was a-

Military Honors Fail To Win Camacho Office

SOUTH AMERICAN military leaders often enjoy a dominant position in the political life of their country. Many ranking soldiers are also high governmental officials.

Bolivia has had many soldier-presidents. One of its most illustrious soldiers, however, Elizardo Camacho, was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the country's highest office.

Camacho, who was honored philately by his government in the 1902 stamp above, was a distinguished general. Born Nov. 14, 1831, in Inquisivi, he interrupted his legal studies at the University of San Simon in 1857 to join the Linares revolution.

He proved to be an outstanding soldier, was prevailed upon to make the army his career and after moving through the ranks became chief of staff under President Frias. When the latter was overthrown, Camacho was forced into exile, but three years later he returned to lead the Bolivian army in the war against Chile.

Leader of the liberal party, he was defeated as candidate for president in 1884 and 1892. He died Nov. 13, 1899.

We, the Women

American Women Copying British Examples, Show They Want No Fire-side Roles in War

By RUTH MILLETT

The courage of the British women who have found no defense job too dangerous to tackle has won for them more respect and admiration than have perhaps ever been given a nation's women. Those uniformed women who are driving ambulances, ferrying planes, digging the dead and wounded from flattened buildings, fighting fires, serving as air raid wardens, working long hours in factories turning out planes and guns.

But don't you suppose that actually those British women are finding the active role they are playing in this war more satisfactory than the role that usually fails to women in wartime?

They are right in the thick of things defending their homes in an active—not passive—way. The woman who drags the injured from a pile of bricks that was once a house, loads them into an ambulance, and, ignoring personal danger, gets them to a hospital for treatment is bound to know that she is doing something worthwhile, that she is playing an important role.

Want to Do More Than Roll Bandages

She is bound to feel more useful than the woman called on to play the traditional role of women in wartime, who is told that doing her part consists of knitting sweaters, rolling bandages, sending boxes of food to bolished at Hendrix. A charter member and secretary-treasurer of the Hendrix Chapter of Blue Key last year, Jewell is president of this men's leadership and service fraternity his senior year. He is also co-chairman of the extended intramurals committee this year. The 1941 Troubadour featured him as one of the outstanding Hendrix students, and for three years he has been a member of the debating squad. Jewell is an economics major.

Lester is a junior at Hendrix. He is an economics major, this year having been initiated as a member of Alpha Chi, national scholarship society. He is president of Tau Kappa Alpha, national debate fraternity, a member of Blue Key, the Booster Club, and the student faculty relations committee. Interfraternity council representative for Tau Omega social fraternity, Lester also edits the Troubadour, Hendrix student yearbook.

An army rifle weighs 8.69 pounds, but after you've been carrying one all day the decimal point drops out.

The fact that Joe Louis passed all his army physical tests must be recorded as the 1941 bulletin least likely to surprise.

Slightly Embarrassing

Sports Around Washington

Capital City Packs Stadium to See Pro-Footballers

By JACK STINNETT
WASHINGTON—When Washington goes for sports, it goes all out. Proof is the phenomenal way official and un-official Washington packs Griffith Stadium and Junkets in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn and Chicago to see their football team, the Redskins, battle the other professional teams of the National League.

Not even in New York or Chicago do the fans turn out any better than in Washington, where the Redskins play to an average of more than 30,000 persons per game. Six years ago, the same team (but of course with the same team but not of course with the same players) was a Boston team, winning 50 per cent or more of its games every season and drawing a weekly gate of between two and three thousands.

What other pro or even college team could boast of having such a fellow as Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones heave out the first ball to start its season? What other eleven could boast a telegram from Sen. Carter Glass that reads: "Sincerely hope Sammy Baugh'll slain his way to victory in every game of the season and lead his team to signal triumphs over his adversaries."

A letter from Emil Schram, ho, on his elevation to head of the New York Stock Exchange, wrote: "Please rest assured that my allegiance to the Redskins will not, in any way, be diminished."

Where else could you find isolationist Sen. Gerald P. Nye, OPM Co., Director William S. Knudsen and Jesse Jones all sitting in the same box and following in unison for the same cause—victory of the Redskins?

I have been through some of these amorphous, pro games. I have seen crowds, limited only by the number of seats that could be jammed into the stadium, drop like wet chicks at a Redskin defeat or go wild with exultation when Baugh fussed one of his bullet passes to Ed Justice in the end zone to give the team a last-minute victory.

What I asked Redskins' Owner George P. Marshall, do you think accounts for this all-out enthusiasm of the nation's capital for pro football, (Marshall owned the team in Boston for every ecosystem over 3,000 probably could have gotten in for two pennants and an unbent pin.)

Some of his theories are an interesting dissertation on what makes Washington, D. C., different from the rest of the United States.

For example: Washington is made up of a heterogeneous population. The folks here come from everywhere. Their home state ties are strong. And 17 of those home states are represented by the 33 members of the Redskins squad (actually there are 22, because a number of the boys starred on teams in colleges or universities in other than their native states.) Jesse Jones, for example, didn't know a punt from a wing back-and-didn't care—until he went out one Sunday to see those prides of Texas, Sammy Baugh and Dick Todd, do their stuff. Now he knows more rules than a referee and can discourse at length on the standing and stars of nearly every team in Texas, as well as those of the pro league. As with Jones, so with most of governmental Washington.

In the case of many of the lesser lights in government employ, there is one added factor. Most of them come from small towns and small colleges. Their teams were strictly in the bush leagues. Now, they have something to root for that not only is big time, but is close to tops on the major circuit.

On the more prosaic side, of course, is the fact that Washington is NOT a big college football ton and those who love the sport have to satisfy themselves with the pros or not at all.

Still that alone wouldn't account for an annual advance sale of 15,000 season tickets; Redskins fan clubs of 100 or more members who hold pre-game jamborees and have "lectures" who tell them all about the plays and players before every game; weekly audiences so full of women (most of them government employees); and many who never sat a football game in their lives until they started following the pigskin heroes of the national capital.

All of that may not explain it, but it doesn't matter what the reason, the fact remains that Washington is the bonanza of professional football and it was George P. Marshall who discovered and staked claim to the diggings.

The new movie, writes the critic, is refreshing. I felt like a new woman when I woke up.

Betty Field in Hollywood

Film City Turns Broadway Good Girl Into a Hussy

NEA Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK—From Sweet Sixteen to a cheap pimbo all in one quick flash—bang—just like that. That's Hollywood. It's also blonde Betty Field as far as her roles are concerned. And she loves it!

Remember Betty as the sweet little thing doing her darndest, trying to get along in "Two On An Island," and then suddenly popping up as a naughty little hussy in the role of "Curley's Wife" in the picture, "Of Mice and Men."

Betty, Boston-born and New York bred, doesn't know how it happened. "I was doing kid parts on Broadway and having a tough time trying to get along because I was so young and there weren't enough of those roles," she said.

"Then, out in Hollywood they were having an awful time trying to find somebody to meet their requirements for 'Curley's Wife.' I guess they tried everybody else and then they tried me. They decided I would do."

Betty, who is 22 years old, unmarried and not even engaged, is a hair-fellow-well-met kind of girl but doesn't drink and doesn't smoke. She likes sports but admits she is poor at them.

Playing naughty parts is fun, she said, so she likes them. They are easier, too, in her opinion.

"How many people know bad girls like that?" she asked. "That means you could do only a fair job of acting and people wouldn't know whether it was good or not because they don't know people like that. I'm sure of it."

She also likes comedy, though, and hopes to get a chance at it soon, both for variety and the pleasure it would give her. As much as she likes playing the part of a hussy, she said, she knows how Hollywood types its players and wants to avoid "getting stuck, you might say."

Military Honors Fail To Win Camacho Office

SOUTH AMERICAN military leaders often enjoy a dominant position in the political life of their country. Many ranking soldiers are also high governmental officials.

Bolivia has had many soldier-presidents. One of its most illustrious soldiers, however, Eliodoro Camacho, was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the country's highest office.

Camacho, who was honored philately by his government in the 1902 stamp above, was a distinguished general. Born Nov. 14, 1831, in Inquisivi, he interrupted his legal studies at the University of San Simon in 1857 to join the Linares revolution.

He proved to be an outstanding soldier, was prevailed upon to make the army his career and after moving through the ranks became chief of staff under President Fries. When the latter was overthrown, Camacho was forced into exile, but three years later he returned to lead the Bolivian army in the war against Chile.

Leader of the liberal party, he was defeated as candidate for president in 1884 and 1892. He died Nov. 13, 1899.

We, the Women

American Women, Copying British Examples, Show They Want No Fire-side Roles in War

By RUTH MILLETT

The courage of the British women, who have found no defense job too dangerous to tackle has won for them more respect and admiration than have, perhaps, ever been given a nation's women.

those uniformed women who are driving ambulances, ferrying planes, digging the dead and wounded from flattened buildings, fighting fires, serving as air raid wardens, working long hours in factories turning out planes and guns.

But don't you suppose that actually those British women are finding the active role they are playing in this war more satisfactory than the role that usually falls to women in wartime?

They are right in the thick of things defending their homes in an active—not passive—way. The woman who drags the injured from a pile of bricks that was once a house, loads them into an ambulance, and, ignoring personal danger, gets them to a hospital for treatment is bound to know that she is doing something worthwhile, that she is playing an important role.

Child Star's Hardest Role Is--Just Acting 'Herself'

MARGUERITE YOUNG
LA Service Staff Writer

NEW YORK — Carolyn Lee, a little girl with a very big movie tract, has been cast in a truly handing real-life role. It is the offstage role of Carolyn's is being herself, Carolyn. It may prove even harder for Carolyn to do than you'd expect, harder fact than any part Hollywood can ask the actress, now seven, to form before the cameras.

Mrs. Evelyn Copp, her mother, put up to Carolyn straight, the other. She said, "I want you to be yourself, like other little girls." Then Carolyn's cameraman, Mrs. Copp explained, "That's why, as soon as a picture is finished, we go straight to Martin's Ferry, where the neighborhood kids will smack Carolyn down as quickly as anybody else." She Shows Mature Poise.

Carolyn accepted this composure. Stage, now, she has the same adult use, the same mobility and maturity expression both when she's gay and when she's sad, as astonished you saw her in Paramount's "Virginia" and "Honeymoon in Ball."

"Sing 'Melancholy Baby' like Bing Crosby sings it with you in your movie," Carolyn's publicity man urged her. She responded perfectly spontaneously. "I'm embarrassed. You know, I really can't carry a tune." "Just try," the pictures man urged. Pretend this is the spoon is the mike." "All right," said Carolyn, picking up the spoon. But you'll have to understand—I'm a little confused. Those are not seven-year-old words, "embarrassed" and "confused," and here's a sample of the predicament Carolyn is in when she tries to be like other little girls. She just isn't; he is something extraordinary. She shows, as an actress, some of the same wunderkind qualities that Yvonne Menken displayed as a child violinist.

Reading Came Early to Her
She has just learned to read, in two months, and her teacher Mrs. Edward R. Horsch, feels absolutely certain formal tests will show that Carolyn's intelligence is "of genius order."

A California psychology professor examined her recently and found she had an I. Q. of 155, which is just four points shy of the genius rating.

She has just taken another test, in New York, in which she scored extremely high.

Try as her mother does, she cannot take Carolyn's unusual experience as an actress out of her life, and Carolyn already seems to know that it makes her unlike others. When her teacher arrived to give her the first lesson, Carolyn said, "Is my dress right?" "It's perfect," Mrs. Horsch assured her.

"But," said Carolyn anxiously, "is it like other little girls school dress?"

She has, too, a sense of responsibility, expressed in fact, that's pretty grown-up too. Her mother asked her whom she liked in Hollywood—Bob

Hope.
"Yeah!" she said eagerly, "and Jack Benny and Helen Broderick." "And Bing Crosby—your new leading man?"

"That's hard to answer," the child answered. "It's kind of personal."

Mrs. Horsch, the teacher, supplied the reason why Carolyn loves the comedians. She has a sharp sense of humor herself. Sometimes she misuses one of those big words, and the teacher will explain matters. Once Carolyn said she'd like to see an "Indian vertebra." It turned out she meant Indian reservation, "where they keep Indians." When Mrs. Horsch told her that vertebra is backbone, Carolyn burst into a laugh, and ran to tell her mother what a funny mistake she'd made.

Mrs. Copp is determined that Carolyn shall be "like others" and shall "be herself" because, she points out, she doesn't want to repeat her own mother's effort to influence her. Mrs. Copp's mother was a music teacher and wanted her daughter to be one too. Mrs. Copp went to Normal School in Alabama, and taught in a backwoods school in Indian River, Crenshaw County, for a year.

"Then I went to business college and became a court reporter," she related. "It made a little revolution at home." It was through an old friend of the

Edson in Washington

The Duncan Baby May Upset Lar or Two

WASHINGTON — It was just before Christmas in 1939. The wife of a WPA worker named Frank Duncan of Spur, Tex., as about to have a baby. Mrs. Duncan's next of kin was a sister, married to one Fred F. Edwards, a migrant agricultural worker in California. When Mrs. Edwards heard of her sister's approaching blessed event and that the expectant father was on relief with none too bright a future ahead, Mrs. Edwards persuaded her husband to drive back to Texas and bring the Duncans to California. She believed the future in the Golden Gate State was somewhat rosier.

Edwards made the trip in his old car and picked up the Duncans. They had $20 when they started back to California. They had $7 when they hit the state line. When they reached their destination, near Marysville, nobody had any cash.

Mrs. Duncan applied to Farm Security Administration for transient assistance during her confinement. It was given, and at federal expense, the Duncan heir was born into this strange new world after New Year's Day.

At this point the California state law caught up with the Duncans and the Edwardses. None of them having been residents of California for three years, they were not eligible for state relief. Edwards was accused of bringing into California a migrant worker in violation of state laws passed originally to curb the state's terrific and still mounting relief burden. Convicted, Edwards was sentenced to six months in the state prison.

But here the federal government, through Farm Security Administration, became interested in the case, for so far no state relief funds had been involved. The case was carried to the State Supreme Court, which upheld the law and ruled that Edwards must serve his sentence.

Little People Become Important

The purpose of this story is not to incite your pity for the Duncans and the Edwardses or to use them as text for any sermon or postscript to "Grapes of Wrath." All that is unimportant. What is important is that the Duncans and the Edwardses have become legal guinea pigs and their troubles have become legal grist for the legal sausage mills of the Supreme Court of the United States. And the long arm of the Law—with a capital L—has put its fingers on the hitherto inconspicuous and unknown Duncans and Edwardses, just as it did to a fellow named Dred Scott back in pre-war-between-the-states days, to make them famous. Lawyers and law schools will argue about migrant Duncan and appellant Edwards for years to come—not because they were poor or because of their troubles, but because they make legal precedent.

How come? It's all about the case of Fred F. Edwards, appellant, vs. the People of the State of California which was argued before the Supreme Court of the United States in its beautiful big marble palace in Washington, D. C., the other day. It is a perfect test case to determine whether a state has the right to define indigency and by indirect prohibition prevent the entry into any state of a citizen of the United States—Duncan—who's only mark of distinction pertinent to the case before the court is that he is poor. Curiously enough, from the non-legal point of view, the lawyers who argued this case before the court are in complete accord that the ultimate issue is the constitutional right of the migrant Duncan, and not those of the defendant Edwards himself.

Means Much to Many

When the worthy Justices hand down their decision in this case, it will affect a lot more people than the migrant Duncan and the appellant Edwards.

Twenty-eight states now have on their statute books laws bearing on restriction of the free flow of human migration within the United States. If the Supreme Court declares the California law unconstitutional—a violation of the clauses guaranteeing that the citizens of each state shall have all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states and the United States—then the 28 states will have to alter their legal restrictions on migrants.

If the Supreme Court upholds the State of California—whose counsel contends that the states have an inherent right, not delegated by the Constitution, to defend themselves against an influx of paupers—then the way is opened for a flood of new

Uncle Sam Wars on Sabotage

Not Single Proved Case in Current Arms Program

By JACK STINNETT

WASHINGTON—On January 1, 1915, a $1,500,000 incendiary fire in the John A. Roebling Co. plant at Trenton, N. J., manufacturing war supplies for the Allies, blew the lid off one of the most amazing series of sabotage cases in world war history.

For nearly four years, these tragic "accidents" were to occur in America's preparedness and defense efforts with staggering repetition.

In February, there was an explosion of suspicious origin in the Haskell, N. J., DuPont powder plant and another occurred in the same place three weeks later.

That summer a foreigner made an unsuccessful effort to blow up the Capitol, planting his bomb in the Vice President's reception room just off the senate chamber. In 1916, the whole country was rocked by the Black Tom explosions on the New Jersey waterfront in New York harbor. The explosions rattled windows and shook buildings 30 miles away. The damage couldn't be estimated. More than a million dollars worth of plate glass was shattered in windows and store fronts in Manhattan across the bay.

After more than two years of national defense and industrial effort for Great Britain and her allies in the current war, there have only been nine proved cases of sabotage in defense plants and in not one of these is there the slightest evidence that it was directed or even inspired by any foreign power.

(One possible exception, although it hardly belongs to this story, is the sabotage of Axis ships in United States harbors. These were cases of nations scuttling their own property to prevent use by the enemy in case of seizure.)

This doesn't mean that some of the accidents in national defense might not have been sabotage. It's just that if they were, there's not any evidence of it. It doesn't mean either that regulatory restrictions on labor migration.

The whole problem of defense labor supply, and labor migration after the defense effort is over, is involved. The problem, in fact, involves not just the rightings of any wrongs done the Duncans and the Edwardses. Whatever has happened to them since Christmas seems to know. Or care. It's the legal principle and precedent that counts.

Another minor case was traced to the malicious mischief of three boys between the ages of eight and 12. But mostly they have been the result of some disgruntled employee trying "to get back at" some boss or co-worker. One, in a shell-case plant, which might have had serious results later on, was hardly more than the vicious

All Arms Joined in a Common Cause

The 1941 poster of the American Red Cross Roll Call for members illustrates the cooperation given to the Armed Forces by the Red Cross. Through Red Cross nurses, field directors and hospital recreation workers in the camps and stations and home service workers in 3,700 Chapters, the Red Cross always stands by as friend to the service man. The poster is an appeal for all men and women to join their local Red Cross Chapters during the Roll Call. The poster is by Robert C. Kauffman, noted magazine illustrator.

Revival Meet Here Continues

Services Conducted Each Night at Tabernacle

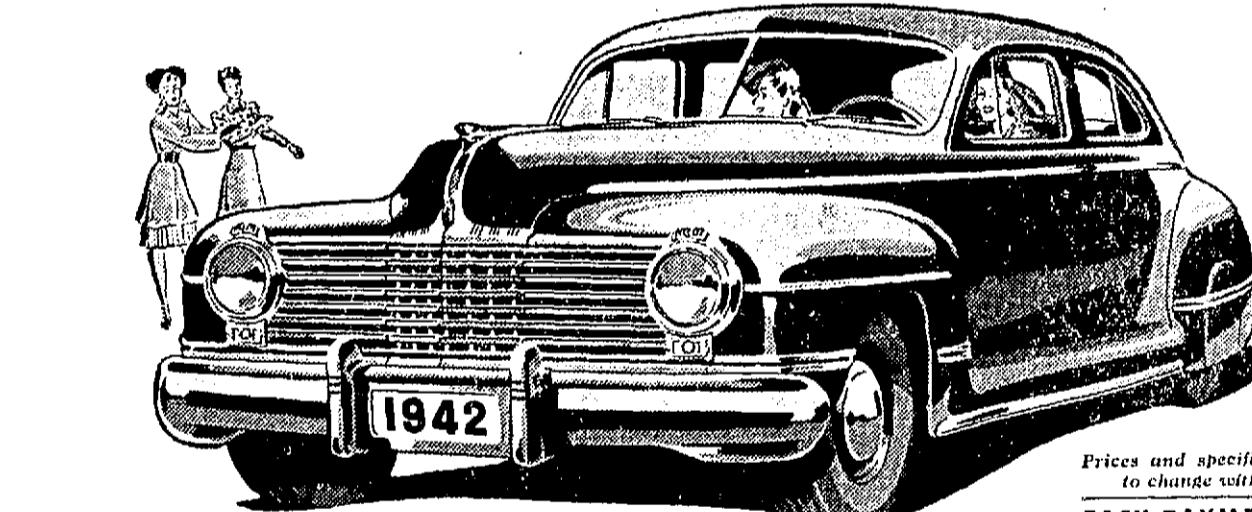

The revival meeting at the Hope

Services are conducted each night at 7:30 o'clock, except Saturday, and will continue through November 6.

The special musical service scheduled for Monday night was postponed until Thursday night due to the rain storm Monday night. The musical program will consume forty-five minutes in the beginning of the service, with Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Williamson, the Tabernacle Sextet, Mrs. Williamson, and other musicians and singers participating.

The congregational singing is being directed by Mr. Williamson, for twenty-five years an evangelistic singer. Traveling with some of the outstanding evangelists in America, and for the past ten years musical director for Faith Tabernacle, Oklahoma City, where his full time was devoted to the work his equipped Mr. Williamson for this type of work, the Rev. Humill said.
